MARK YOUR DIARIES NOW!

The International Symposium: Dietary Protein for Human Health will cover a broad range of topics concerning the role of protein in human nutrition, health and well-being. The three-day Symposium will include presentations and discussions on evaluation of protein quality (including concepts and definitions, advances in methodologies, PDCAAS, digestible/available amino acids and regulatory aspects of dietary protein quality).

The Symposium will bring together international leaders in protein nutrition and related areas and will provide an authoritative update on recent scientific developments of critical importance to human welfare and food security.

A separate Expert Consultation on protein quality organised by FAO, 31 March – 2 April, 2011, will be held immediately following the Symposium.
